"Children, the boly angels have told me to go away from your father for a while and you must come with me," Mrs. Lens Zarcone told her two little daughters before she took them from their bome, No. 189 Adams Street, Brooklyn, to wander all last night. "You won't have time to finish your bread and milk. We must go before he gets home from work."

Already she had put on her shawl. In her arms she held her five-monthsold baby-since whose birth the older children had noticed that "mamma seted so funny."
